"Digging Deep" into the Natural and Social Networks with Berkeley Dance Project 2017

Choreography: Dacie Wells  "Natural" "Digging Deep" is a complex and thought-provoking piece that explores the interconnectedness of social and natural networks. The piece begins with a group of dancers in a tight circle, symbolizing the interdependence of individuals within a community. The dancers move in a fluid, organic manner, mirroring the way ecosystems and social networks evolve and adapt. The use of space and movement highlights the delicate balance between order and chaos, capturing the essence of how nature and society coexist.

As the piece progresses, the dancers break out of their initial formation to form smaller groups, each representing a different network. These groups perform in unison, illustrating the idea that even the smallest interactions can have a significant impact on the larger system. The choreography is both graceful and powerful, reflecting the complexity of the natural world.

Towards the end of the piece, the dancers come together in a final display of unity, emphasizing the importance of collaboration and collective action. The piece ends with a moment of stillness, symbolizing the need for reflection and understanding in our interconnected world.

"Digging Deep" is a profound exploration of the interconnectedness of our natural and social networks, offering a thought-provoking commentary on the resilience and fragility of these systems.

As Berkeley Dance Project delve into the natural and social networks with their new choreography, using dance and music as a medium to express the human and social landscape, the Berkeley Dance Project 2017 aims to explore the dynamics of human interaction and the role of dance in society.

The project will feature a range of performances, including a world premiere of a new work created by the Berkeley Dance Project's resident choreographer. The performances will take place over the course of several weeks, with each dance highlighting different aspects of the natural and social networks.

The project is supported by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, and is part of the Berkeley Arts Festival, which celebrates the diverse cultural heritage of the city.
